MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

1. The undersigned is currently a member of the Senior Seminar in Foreign Policy conducted by the Foreign Service Institute. During the course of a visit by seminar members to Time-Life Incorporated on November 20, I found myself in conversation with Mr. Robert Lubar, Managing Editor of Fortune. While discussing with me the pros and cons of various articles Fortune had in mind for future issues, Mr. Lubar said he would "love to do an article on the Agency."

2. I responded that there had been a lot of stories done on the Agency, some of them of course far from reliable. I presumed he had in mind some updating or something in the technological field. He said that was it, he would like to do something involving this area. I said that this was a very sensitive matter and the only man who could rule on such a request was the Director himself. He agreed and the conversation ended on that note.

3. I could not help but recall in connection with this conversation some remarks made to me in Vienna by Mr. Morrison of DOD during that phase of the SALT talks. He had been dispatched on a fact-finding visit by Mr. Froelke to look into the intelligence support function which he found to be in good shape. Mr. Morrison told me, however, that he was taking back to DOD the notion that we should start to examine our public disclosure
